Inverted Nipple Correction

Inverted nipples are a very common problem. Some women will suffer from mastitis during pregnancy aggravated by inverted nipples. The correction for this will be based on the extent of the deformity, age of the patient and the requirement for the ability to breast feed.

Surgical Options: There are two kinds of operations for this condition. These are based on preserving the ducts and therefore preserving the ability to breast feed or dividing the ducts. In some cases inverted nipple correction cannot be obtained without dividing the ducts.

Scars: Scarring is minimal with most operations. Mr Khandwala will show you the type of scarring that will commonly result from your chosen operation.

It is important to remember that the use of the Niplette® will be advised before and after surgery. This is essential to keep the correction.

Mr Khandwala will advise you on the best method to correct your inverted nipple. Should there be an recurrence, a further operation may be necessary.

Nipple sensation can occasionally change after an inverted nipple correction.
